WWI COMMEMORATION

You will be aware that the armistice to end World War I came into effect at 11 o'clock on November 11th 1918. Consequently this centenary year will see the people of this country, the commonwealth and its allies, and perhaps its enemies, come together to remember and reflect on the folly and the enormity of that conflict and consider ways of commemorating its end. Our national and local governments are initiating and supporting plans to conduct commemorations fitting for this significant milestone in history, and are making financial support available for appropriate initiatives. There will be grand ceremonies to mark this event at national level and thousands of smaller projects at local level to focus attention on this moment in time. The Burley Branch of the Royal British Legion, supported by BPC, is aware of their responsibility to take the lead in any commemorative events that may be arranged in the village but recognise that other interest groups in the village will have a view and a part to play in such events. Public participation is invited at the next BPC meeting at the Myrtle Hall on March 14th at 6.30pm to discuss whether the village of Burley should commemorate this event in some additional way to the traditional service at the Memorial Cross and, if so, to start a process to determine what form that, or those commemorations should take and how we as a community should implement any decisions taken. It is not the intention to make any firm decisions about a particular commemorative event or events at this meeting but to stimulate interest, generate ideas and assess the potential of our combined resources and perhaps form a committee to act on any proposals made.
